WELCOME ADDRESS

A warm welcome to the fourth Nigerian Risk Awards and Summit, and thank you for taking the time out of your busy schedules to participate this year.

Election years are some of the most important times for communities, states and nations, dominated by the recurring challenge of the fight for votes by different candidates and political parties. Regardless of the political systems or structure in any country, there are key deliverables which I believe must be sacrosanct if true governance and social risks are to be managed properly.

Risk is the effect of uncertainty on an objective (ISO 31000). An election or campaign promise is a promise or guarantee made to the public by a candidate or political party that is trying to win an election. These promises are, in effect, the same as setting key objectives. But how can you decide whose electoral promises are most likely to be kept? I've devised a six-question framework to help electorates make a risk-based decision, gaining an understanding of potential threats and identifying key opportunities each candidate or party is putting forward.

Every vote counts, so it is imperative for voters to be able to hold would-be leaders or candidates to account, ensuring they deliver on the manifesto commitments. As a risk leadership professional, my objective is to encourage better decision-making at the polling booths next year.

The objective of this year's summit and awards is to create the perfect vehicle for Nigerian professionals both in the private and public sectors to discuss practical approaches to addressing key challenges of governance, nation building, security, political risk, offer possible solutions and to present awards to individuals and organisations making efforts towards effective management of risks in Nigeria.

People have asked me many a time why we run this project and my answer has always been "why not?" If all we do is to complain that Nigeria is not working, who is going to fix it? I believe it is our responsibility to allow our light to shine so that others can walk in the light of same grace. I believe in celebrating efforts and say well done.

"A Great nation is a nation that respects the services of the heroes." - Soekarno

Thank you and God Bless
